Kenneth Foster, 13, Dies From Loss of Blood After Gunshot Wounds

DOYLESTOWN, Nov. 4.—The hunting expedition of four boys, all residents of Carversville, near here, turned into tragedy when one of the quartette was shot and wounded fatally by his 14-year-old neighbor and chum.

The dead boy is Kenneth Foster, 13, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry M. Foster. He died yesterday at the Abington Memorial Hospital as a result of loss of blood.

His grief-stricken companion, William Ridge, 14, from whose gun a charge of shot tore into Foster's body on Saturday, was exonerated by the dead boy's parents, but remained inconsolable.

The four boys had been hunting in a small wood near the Foster home during the late afternoon. Just at dusk, Foster succeeded in driving a gopher into its hole and started to dig it out.

He shouted gleefully to his companions to come and help him get the animal when it emerged, and then returned to his task.

In the fast-gathering dusk, he didn't see a small hummock of grass. His feet caught in it and he was pitched headlong to the ground.

The gun discharged with a roar.

Foster, who had been kneeling while he dug, stiffened and then collapsed with a shout.

Ridge scrambled to his feet, stunned for a moment. Then he heard his chum's shrieks of pain and ran to him.

The other two boys likewise ran up and stood, terror-stricken, while the older boys sought to help Foster to his feet. Blood poured out of a great wound in Kenneth's side and saturated his clothing.

Ridge and the others carried Foster to his home, which was only a short distance away, and a doctor was summoned.

First aid was administered, but the physician realized the seriousness of the injury and ordered Foster removed to the Doylestown Emergency Hospital.

Later in the evening it was deemed advisable to take the boy to the Abington Memorial Hospital. Arrived there, every effort to save his life was made. Saline and blood transfusions were vain. The boy died yesterday afternoon.

Ridge told his story to the Abington police and the parents of the dead boy likewise corroborated it and made a statement freeing Ridge from blame and branding the tragedy as an accident.

State police of the Doylestown Barracks will make a formal investigation of the shooting today to complete the records. The names of the other two boys were not revealed by Abington police, who explained that they were merely witnesses to the shooting.

Bristol Folks Attend A Party at Bethayres Home

Mr. and Mrs. B. Connors, of Bethayres, former residents of Edgely, entertained friends at their home on Friday evening at a Hallowe'en party. Mrs. Connors, while a resident of Edgely, was a telephone operator in the Bristol exchange, and a number of Bristol folks were invited to the party. The trip was made via motor.

Most of the guests were masked and their costumes were varied. The evening was spent playing different games, and the guests were also entertained by Leonard Cook, of Bethayres, a comedian, who sang songs, danced and gave readings and monologues.

The decorations were orange and black crepe paper streamers, draped around the various rooms, and ghosts, black cats and witches were conspicuous here and there. Orange paper shades covered the lighting fixtures, lending a golden glow in the rooms. At a late hour, a delicious buffet lunch was served to the following guests:

Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Kline, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Loehner, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Elberson, Mrs. Ida Percy, Mrs. Jessie Jacobs, Miss Mary Roe, Miss Elsie Day, Miss Jessie Caulford, Miss Dorothy Doan and Earl Wright of Bristol; Miss Edna King, of Edgely; Alice Smith, of Cornwells; "Bob" Pines, Joseph Keating and Clarence Broadnax, of Langhorne; Mr. and Mrs. John Rush, of Fox Chase; Miss Stella Coffin, Miss Lillie Campbell, Harry White, "Bud" Borden, Mrs. Lauver, and "Sonny" Connors, all of Bethayres.

Brady Commandery To Hold Class Initiation Tonight

Class initiation will be held this evening at the regular meeting of J. S. Brady Commandery, No. 57, in Trades Hall. Special arrangements have been made and a large delegation will be here from Mercer Commandery, No. 25, of Trenton, N. J., also Bucks Commandery, No. 64, of Yardley.

Several commanderies from Philadelphia will also be represented. Charles H. Davis, who is recorder in chief of the Commandery General will also bring a large delegation from Philadelphia. A large number of candidates have been secured for this occasion.

TWO HURT WHEN MACHINE SKIDS INTO AUTO-BUS

Dr. Martin Apfelbaum and Herman Laks Now in Hospital

WET ROAD IS BLAMED

Accident Occurred at Dead Man's Curve, Near Pipersville

DOYLESTOWN, Nov. 4.—A crash on "dead man's bend," at Pipersville yesterday morning, in which two were hurt, is laid to the skidding of one of the machines on the wet highway.

The two injured are:

Dr. Martin Apfelbaum, 32, Wilkes-Barre;

Herman Laks, 36, also of Wilkes-Barre.

The two men are patients in the Doylestown Hospital, where they are being treated for numerous scalp lacerations, body cuts, bruises and shock. Fourteen stitches were taken to close the wounds of Apfelbaum.

The car in which Laks was driving Dr. Apfelbaum skidded when Laks applied his brakes as he approached the curve. The auto skidded and crashed into a large P. R. T. passenger bus.

THREE OF QUINTETTE FROM PHILADELPHIA RESCUED BY BRISTOLIANS; ONE WOMAN IS STILL IN HARRIMAN HOSPITAL SUFFERING FROM SEVERE SHOCK

Driver of Car, Who Lost Life, Believed to Have Become Confused in Fog and Rain; Was Seeking Route to The Boulevard for Return Trip Home

Two were drowned, and three others had narrow escapes from meeting similar fates when the automobile in which they were riding catapulted over the Mill street boat wharf, and dropped into the Delaware River here early yesterday morning.

The drowned:

Elmer Wanderer, 29, single, of 2739 Reese street, Philadelphia;

William Nice, 55, single, 2849 North Front street, Philadelphia.

The rescued:

Mrs. Nora Ward, 40, 2801 Lawrence street, Philadelphia; Miss Anna Dougherty, 35, 2801 Lawrence street, Philadelphia.

Edward Brooks, 31, 716 W. Lehigh avenue, Philadelphia.

It was shortly after 1:30 o'clock yesterday morning when the accident occurred. Rain was falling, and fog covered the river section. Word of the tragedy was flashed to police headquarters, and all police officers and the firemen on duty at the headquarters of the Consolidated Fire Department were pressed into service. Fire apparatus was taken to the scene and their searchlights were played over the inky blackness of the river.

The police officers and the firemen, after lighting up the scene of the accident, proceeded to the scene of the rescue, aided by a number of civilians who had been attracted to the spot. Fire ladders, ropes and hooks were used to good advantage, as well as grappling irons.

Joseph ("Jody") Williams, Bristol's well-known inhabitant of the river section, was the first to reach the scene. Williams lives in a shanty adjacent to the boat wharf, and he was aroused from his slumbers by the frantic screams of the occupants of the car, who realized their plight as water began to rise on the inside of the car.

Williams quickly sensing the situation, grabbed a row-boat near at hand and scantly clad went out into the river. To his quick action Mrs. Ward and Brooks owe their lives today. Both were floating out in the river about 20 feet beyond the ferry dock when Williams came upon them. He succeeded first in getting Mrs. Ward into the boat, and then later picked up Brooks. It was a brave act, well done, and today Williams is receiving the congratulations of the townspeople.

Miss Anna Dougherty, the other woman of the quintet, was rescued by some river piling, and with the aid of Ferry. They found her clinging to some river piling, and with the aid of some civilians succeeded in landing her ashore.

Of the three rescued two have been discharged from the Harriman Hospital. Miss Dougherty still remains at the institution, suffering from severe shock. Brooks, who was discharged from the hospital yesterday, suffered from shock, and a lacerated contused wound of the chin which required two stitches. Mrs. Ward, a widow and mother of four children, suffered from shock. She has also returned to her home.

Search was continued for the two remaining occupants of the car until daylight. It was nearly nine o'clock yesterday morning before the first body was recovered. This was found by Chief of Police Linford C. Jones and George Trout, of Cedar street. It was the body of Elmer Wanderer. The next body to be brought to shore was that of William Nice, operator of the machine. This was recovered by Police Officer Thomas Ryan and Joseph Swangler.

None of the rescued, after their admittance to the Harriman Hospital, were able to tell how they had gotten out of the machine. Brooks, at his home in Philadelphia last night, according to the Philadelphia police, said that the accident occurred at about 1:45 a.m., and the fog was terrific. "We could hardly see," he said. "Suddenly after we passed the blinking light at the foot of Mill street Nice yelled a warning. He tried to stop the car but couldn't. The car hit a railing and the next second it was falling into space and we were being tossed about in it."

"We hit the water with an awful splash. It was a fourteen-foot drop I found out afterwards. Down, down we went in 20 feet of water."

"I saw Nice slump forward. I was in the front seat with him. Wanderer was in the back seat with the two women. Out of the corner of my eye I saw the women working the handles of the doors of the car. I grabbed the handle of the door nearest me."

"I got an awful jolt in the chin—I can't tell just when. I remember thinking I must get out and get to the top. Then I don't remember, until I found myself at the surface."

"I'm a good swimmer, so everything was all right, except that I felt my (Continued on Page Four)

CRITICS OF THE JURY

Tampering with a jury is impermissible because the law makes it so, but tampering with the jury system is impermissible because public opinion forbids it.

Any movement to effect a change in the jury system in vogue in the United States is doomed to an early and fruitless end. Though recent criticisms might indicate to the contrary, there is nothing in the whole system of government in which the American people have greater faith than in the jury system.

In their hysteria due to so-called crime waves and acquittals of persons "convicted" in the minority public opinion before their trial, some, including a supreme court justice, have spoken favorably of modifying the jury system so as to permit convictions in criminal cases on less than the unanimous vote of the jury.

Some of the arguments employed in support of the idea are that it has proved successful in both civil and criminal courts in some European countries and in civil courts of several states in this country. Perhaps the most effective argument for verdicts by a majority or three-fourths vote is that of the judge who noted that under the unanimous verdict requirement the sole man who holds out is as powerful as the eleven with whom he disagrees, a condition that amounts to one-man rule of the jury. On the other hand, is it not dangerous to convict a man on evidence so weak it cannot convince twelve men or women of his guilt?

Tamperers with the jury system will have a long road to travel so long as Americans continue to look upon that system as one of the bulwarks of freedom and equality.

A SELFISH TARIFF VIEW

During the presidential campaign a year ago Governor Smith and John J. Rasko vowed and attempted to prove that the Democrats were as good protectionists as the Republicans. Democrats who want a high price for their products or a high wage for their labor are good protectionists, but in the halls of congress there are still to be found Democrats who think it politically expedient to attack the Republican brand of protection.

When Senator Caraway instituted the senatorial inquiry into the practices of lobbyists, everyone believed it a sincere move to destroy the evils of lobbying. Developments since then have been such as to make it plain that his only intent was to discredit the protective tariff.

Enough has been heard from the Caraway camp to make it evident that its members are playing a selfish game. In the same breath they oppose protection for Republican states and favor it for Democratic sections.

Whatever academic theorists among the Democrats may say to the contrary, the United States is committed to the policy of protection for home industries. Even the Democratic party, at a time when it was committed to free trade, was in power eight years without depriving the nation's industries of the protection of a tariff wall.

Joy riders need not be in such a hurry. Hell keeps open all night.

What puzzles us about the dinosaur, after following the dispatches for a time, is the trait of leaving its thigh bones in Arizona and its eggs in Mongolia.

ECHOES OF THE PAST

ITEMS OF INTEREST AS CLIPPED FROM NEWSPAPER FILES

Columns of the Newtown Enterprise of November 3, 1894, stated that a reunion of four generations of the Harling family was held at Feasterville.

Among the interesting items were also found:

Three men entered the shoemaker shop of Jacob H. Hinkie, at Pineville, and stole Mr. Hinkie's best overcoat and a pair of shoes.

Fallsington farmers and land owners formed themselves into a Game Protective Association and resolved to prosecute violators of game and fish laws and trespassers.

J. W. Parker was appointed postmaster at Edgewood, succeeding Charles Wildman, whose business he purchased.

J. Cernell Vanartsdalen, of Northampton township, grew an immense crop of turnips. The combined weight of two of the largest was 15 pounds.

The water from the famous Ingham Spring in Solebury, near the entrance to the Deer Park, was being bottled by Dr. Mattison, the owner of the premises, and sold in New York and Philadelphia.

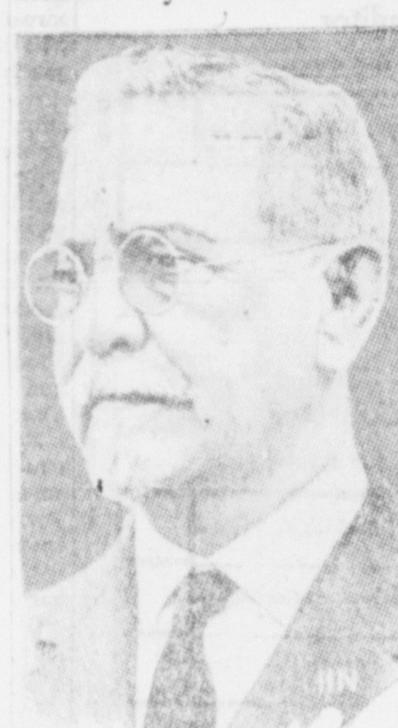

Gen. James W. Latta, of Philadelphia, candidate for Secretary of Internal Affairs, was a speaker at the Republican rally held in Newtown. Capt. William Wynkoop presided over the meeting. Hon. Irving P. Waager, candidate for re-election to Congress told of the difficulties in getting a tariff bill passed, there being more than 700 amendments proposed.

Following accounts were given the readers, also:

In the closing exercises of Wrightson First-day School recitations were given by Mary W. Nagle, Oscar Wiggins, William VanHorn, Albert W. Werthington and Samuel W. Miller. Essays were read by Mary W. Warner and William E. Smith. O. H. Holcombe, Isaac Eyré and Dr. Lettie Smith of Newtown, also spoke.

A horse and carriage belonging to John Gill were taken from a church shed at Richboro. On the preceding Sunday a team of Joseph A. Addis, of Ivyland, had been taken from the sheds. The horse in each instance was ungreased and turned loose.

GOLD DIGGERS of BROADWAY
by EVE BERNSTEIN

Copyright, 1929, Warner Bros. Pictures Inc.

This novel is based on the Warner Bros. & Vitaphone Natural Color Picture. Adapted from Avery Hopwood's play, "The Gold Diggers."

SYNOPSIS

Violet, a chorus girl, and her fiance, Wally, enlist the aid of Jerry, understander to the star, in getting the consent of Wally's uncle to their marriage. Jerry allows Uncle Steve to mistake her for Violet, and assumes the role of a scheming woman so that he will be happy to let someone else marry Wally. Blake, Steve's lawyer, suggests that they take Jerry out to get acquainted before making a final decision, and Jerry's friend, Mabel, comes along. The gold-digging starts, and is brought to a climax by party which Steve is to pay for. Jerry dismisses the party, after having asked Steve to come back later. Barney remains for Paris! Jerry Lamar, perhaps you're an awful fool!"

She did not need to assure herself of Barney's sincerity. She had known him long enough to understand him. He would have given her things and made a fairly good husband besides. No more worries about money. Clothes—traveling!

Everything she had always wanted she was turning down with a cold-bloodedness that would have horrified Mabel, as well as Topsy and Eleanor. They had been telling her for months what a fool she was not to pay more attention to Barney, and if they knew of this, they would be convinced of her insanity. She had been heartless to play with him like that tonight, but what could she do? It was for VI. She had never been able to help herself, and it was up to Jerry to do all she could for her.

She rested her head back on the chair and closed her eyes, and then a quick ring at the door awakened her. In the hall, she looked at herself again to make sure she was presentable, and opened the door for Uncle Steve.

Jerry carried over a stool and placed it in front of Jerry. Then he seated himself there, and took Jerry's hand in his.

"Jerry, darling."

"Say, what's the matter with you? I thought you wanted to talk to me?"

"I do—very much. That's why I'm here. Jerry, darling," he repeated.

"Haven't I heard that somewhere

"I almost did, but I decided that I wanted to talk to you—alone."

"How charming!" Jerry said half-heartedly, sitting down in the chair he had just left. "Bring a chair. I'm too tired to stand—and you might as well sit too."

Barney carried over a stool and placed it in front of Jerry. Then he seated himself there, and took Jerry's hand in his.

"Jerry, darling."

"Say, what's the matter with you? I thought you wanted to talk to me?"

"I do—very much. That's why I'm here. Jerry, darling," he repeated.

"Well, we won't talk about that now."

She took his arm and walked into the living room with him, motioning to the sofa where he was to sit.

"Now, if you'll excuse me for a moment, I'll be right back."

She had decided that this was not going to fail, no matter how long she had to keep him there, and she was going to take all precautions against a possible failure. In the kitchen she mixed some cocktails for them, and set out a bucket of ice for the champagne, all of which fortunately, had not been consumed. Then she went to her room and removed her dress, to change into a more comfortable, and at the same time more seductive, outfit—a black negligee, fitted to the figure, with transparent lace, falling in long, wide folds over the arms. She added more rouge to her face and lips, and combed her hair back so that it revealed her ears. After replacing the dancing slippers with red satin mules, she took a last look at herself and decided that her appearance was quite satisfactory. To add a little more freshness to her face, which distinctly showed signs of a long, strenuous evening, she renewed the mascara on her lashes and deepened the artificial shadows at the corners of her eyes and the shade of her eyebrows. With the final touches made, she went back to the living room.

Uncle Steve seemed quite entranced with her appearance.

"You look charming, Jerry," he told her.

"I just had to get comfortable, Uncle Steve."

"It's really quite an attractive outfit, you know."

His eyes took her in, appraisingly, and she could see that he was well pleased, to her dismay. She had counted on his being rather annoyed with her, not only for having taken the time to make such an elaborate change, when he was waiting for her, but for deliberately trying to attract attention to her appearance. If Wally could see his Uncle now!

"No, Barney."

She got up, as if to end the matter, but Barney seized her arm and forced her to sit down again.

"But we've been over it so many times. Why can't we settle it once and for all?"

"I'm really fond of you, Jerry," he said on. "In fact, I love you, and you know it. I'll give you anything in the world."

"No—I told you no, Barney."

"A house in town—a house in the country."

"No, Barney."

"An apartment in Paris if you want it—jewels—I'll cover you with them."

"I don't want them."

He arose and drew her beside him. Very gently he put his arms around her and lifted her chin to see her face better.

"Well?" he said.

"Please, Barney, don't start this all over again. You know—"

He held her so tightly that she could hardly breathe, and before she could even make an attempt to get away, he had kissed her many times.

"Why, of course."

He followed her in and came out with the champagne bucket and cocktails, and according to her instructions, set them down on a small table, which she asked him to move over to the couch where they were to sit.

"I thought we could talk better with something to drink in front of us," she explained.

"Yes, indeed," he agreed, accepting her explanation as something logical and satisfactory. "It does help—sometimes."

"Besides, this will be our very own party, won't it, Uncle Steve?"

Again he agreed, as he laid the glasses out on the table for them, and gave the cocktail a final shake.

"I hate these bright lights, don't you, Uncle Steve?" she wanted to know. "They make my eyes hurt."

"They are rather bright," he replied, looking at them, blinking his eyes, and shading them with his hand.

"The lamps make such a soft glow," she said. Lighting them in each corner of the room, and turning out the side lights, "and I mustn't forget the incense."

She asked Lee for match which she lit and applied to an exotic incense jar which stood on the end table at one side of the sofa.

Three of Quintette From Philadelphia Rescued By Bristolians

"Then I heard a woman screaming. I could see Mrs. Ward. She is a heavy woman and wore a big fur coat. She was sinking. I swam over to her and grabbed her. Nearby a piling log was floating. I managed to drag her to it and told her to hold on.

"Then I heard Miss Dougherty screaming. She seemed to be near the shore—nearer than we were, that is. I couldn't see her because of the fog."

"By the way she was screaming I could tell she had hold of something; I mean it was a steady screaming, not like as if she had to fight to keep her head above water.

"I was thinking I ought to swim over to help her, but just then Mrs. Ward slipped from the log and I had to grab for her. She seemed to be getting very weak. So I decided to hang around her. I was sure of saving her, and I didn't want to have them both drown while I fished around in the dark.

"I told Mrs. Ward to scream as loud as she could so that somebody might hear and come help us. I didn't dare swim to shore for help because she could hardly hold on to the plank.

"She couldn't scream very loudly, she was so weak. But I could hear that Miss Dougherty was screaming so that her voice carried.

"It was agony there. We were there all of 35 minutes. I was getting weaker and weaker myself, because the blood was pouring from where my chin was gashed.

"I wondered where Nice and Wanderer were, but figured they got out safely. I still don't understand how Wanderer was drowned, unless he waited until he pushed the two women out and swallowed too much water himself. Nice must have been hurt when we hit the railing.

"I was almost ready to give up myself when a small boat came along and a man pulled us in. Then I don't remember anything until I came to in the hospital."

Those who witnessed the rescue claim that only the uncanny skill of Williams kept the small boat from capsizing while he pulled Brooks and Mrs. Ward into it and got them to the shore.

According to Philadelphia reports the party started out for a ride in Mrs. Ward's machine shortly before midnight, following Mrs. Ward's release from the Front and Westmoreland police station, where she had been taken after police had raided her saloon at Cumberland and Lawrence streets.

Nice, who was driving, became lost in the fog and rain, and drove onto Mill street while attempting to get on a road leading back to Philadelphia. One of the group said that they had no idea they were anywhere near the wharf, but were under the impression they were driving across a wooden bridge.

It is believed someone opened the doors as the car plunged over the end of the wharf, and that the five either jumped or fell out. Nice and Wanderer were struck by the doors, and it is believed that this stunned them and they were unable to make any effort to save themselves.

In making the turn off of Mill street, Nice, the driver of the car, apparently lost all sense of direction, and did not notice the character of his surroundings or the flashing traffic beacon which warns that anyone proceeding beyond is driving into the dead end of the street.

The water in front of the Mill street wharf is one of the deepest points along the waterfront. The tide was running in at the time of the accident and the water was about 18 feet deep. The distance of the drop from the top of the wharf to the water was about six feet. The bodies of those drowned were taken to the morgue of the H. S. Rue Estate, and placed in charge of Deputy Coroner W. Furman Young.

Quite a few individuals were attracted to the scene, and assisted in the work of rescue and recovery of the bodies.

A Hero's Laurels
Rest Nonchalantly
On Williams' Brow

It was in the neighborhood of 1:30 yesterday morning. "Jody" was sleeping peacefully in his abode in what was formerly the office of the late harbor master, Samuel W. Mihor. The shack is located at the foot of Mill street adjacent to the Mill street boat wharf. "Jody" was dreaming dreams of the days to come, and was expressing his delight at the imaginary pictures drawn upon his brain in snores, the kind that only a man sleeping soundly can make.

"Help! Help! Help!!!"

This was the sound which rent the noise made by the patter of rain drops in the tin roof of "Jody's" shack. "Jody" was awake in an instant. "I heard those cries," he says, "and I grabbed a new pair of silk socks, shirt and trousers, and rushed out. I knew that someone was in danger and had gone overboard."

Now "Jody" knows the river like a dog knows the footsteps of his master. "Jody" rushed out into the blackness of a dark, stormy and fog laden night characteristic of river fronts on such a night as Saturday.

I grabbed a boat and made out into the river. I grabbed a woman first.

She was big and heavy but I yanked her into the boat and told her to lay there while I got a man who was floating by. The man called to me. I asked him if he was left handed. If not, grab the boat, I says. Then I jerked him aboard and made to shore with him."

This is all that "Jody" has to say about his act of bravery, but those who reached the scene later say that "Jody" was a true hero in every sense of the word. He went about his work in a cool manner and worked like a Trojan. He was out in the drizzling rain and was water soaked for hours and was only scantly clad but he never flinched. He just worked and did all that any one man could do to aid those in distress.

The identity of the pair Williams saved was learned at the Harriman Hospital to which institution they were taken. There their names were recorded as Nora Ward and Edward Brooks.

Williams made his rescues at least 20 feet out beyond the ferry dock and it belongs all credit for his brave deed. He measured up to the emergency.

How to Vote Straight Republican Ticket

(Continued from Page One) primaries held September 17th. On that occasion it was necessary for a voter to place an "X" opposite the name of each candidate for whom he desired to vote. This will not be necessary tomorrow.

At the general election tomorrow all that is required of the voter to cast a straight Republican party ticket is to place an "X" in the square opposite the name of that party. This will mean a straight Republican vote and will count as one for each Republican candidate on the ballot.

It will be noticed in the sample ballot that only the names of candidates for offices to be voted for at large in the Borough are given. The blank spaces indicate where candidates for the various ward offices will appear.

Nicholas Moffo Weds Philadelphia Miss

the ceremony was performed before a large company of relatives and friends. Lohengrin's wedding march was played on the organ, accompanied by an eight-piece orchestra, as the bridal party entered the church.

Misses Mary and Ida Moffo, sisters of the groom, and Miss Freida Christalane, of Philadelphia, were bridesmaids; Miss Anna Rubini, of Philadelphia, niece of the bride, was matron of honor. Angeline Esposito, of Wood street. Serving Mr. Moffo as best man, Philadelphia, were flower-girls and the ring bearer was Alfred Esposito, of Wood street. Serving Mr. Mogo as best man was Charles Cinti, of Philadelphia, brother of the bride, and the ushers were Alfred Moffo, brother of the groom, and Philip Quici, of Pond street.

The bride looked attractive in a gown of ivory transparent velvet, made Princess style, long, tight sleeves and long train. Her veil of silk tulle was cap shape, trimmed with princess lace, orange blossoms and pearls. She wore ivory crepe de chine and slippers with stockings to match and carried a bridal shower bouquet of white roses and lilies.

Miss Anna Rubini, the matron of honor, was attired in a gown of light pink satin back crepe, made on straight lines, sleeveless and had an overskirt of pink tulle to match the hemline which was long in the back and short in the front, and a spray of pink rosebuds was caught at the waist line. With this was worn pink satin slippers with stockings to match and a silver bandole of leaves and rhinestones, and she carried a bouquet of pink rose buds to match.

The three bridesmaids wore dresses made exactly like that of the matron of honor, only in a darker shade of pink, with slippers and stockings to match. Each girl work a silver metal skull cap and all carried a bouquet of pink rosebuds.

The little flower girls wore pretty dresses of pink satin back crepe, made plain, with pink bonnets, and socks to match, black satin slippers and carried flower baskets filled with pink rose buds.

The ring-bearer wore a black velvet suit, with white satin blouse and black beller jacket, black patent leather slippers and white socks and carried a beautiful white lace pillow, bearing the wedding ring.

After the wedding ceremony, the bridal party, accompanied by relatives and friends, journeyed to Bristol via motor, where a reception was held in St. Ann's Hall on Logan street. About four hundred guests attended the reception. Delta's Orchestra furnished the music for the dancing. During the evening, the bride and groom left for a honeymoon trip. The bride wore an evening costume, a dark grey ensemble suit, trimmed with kid fox fur, with slippers and stockings, hat, gloves and hand-bag to match. Upon their return, Mr. and Mrs. Moffo will take up their newly furnished apartment over the Moffo Shoe Store at 311 Main street.

Mr. Moffo was born in Italy, but came to this country with his family when quite young. He attended the public schools, Rider's night school in Trenton, and he recently completed a course at Dr. Scholl's Orthopedic School in New York. Mr. Moffo is in the shoe business with his father, and is very well known and has hosts of friends in Bristol. Mr. and Mrs. Moffo received many valuable and handsome wedding gifts from their many relatives and friends.

Guests attending the wedding were from Bristol, Trenton, Newark, New York, Passaic and Philadelphia.

Surprise Party Tendered To Ralph Stromp, Friday

The many friends of Ralph Stromp, of 2108 Wilson avenue, tendered him a surprise birthday and Hallowe'en party at his home on Friday night. The guests gathered at the home of Miss Esther Reynolds, of Wilson avenue, and later went to the Stromp home and awaited the arrival of Ralph, who was very much surprised when he returned.

Most of the guests were masked, and the three rooms were prettily decorated for the occasion, the colors being orange and black. Black cats, goblins, corn husks, etc., were visible here and there and orange lanterns covered the various lights, giving a soft light in the rooms. Refreshments were served in the dining room. The table looked attractive with a bouquet of flowers in the center, while at each end an orange candlestick and candle was placed and the candles were lighted while the guests enjoyed their refreshments. Each guest received as a favor an orange snapper.

The evening was spent playing various games, singing and dancing. For some of the games, prizes were given and those receiving them were: Miss Rita McGee and John Dougherty. Miss Reba Spangler, entertained the guests by rendering several selections on the piano.

Those present were: Thelma Wallace, Rita McGee, Rita Barnfield, Miriam Rhode, Katharine Rhode, Dorothy Anderson, Luella Kishbaugh, Ida Phipps, Garnetta Herman, Carol Reynolds, Reba Spangler, John Dougherty, Fred Bell, Leslie Rogers, Raymond Kishbaugh, Chester White, John Raccagni, Rens Swan, George Perkins, Arthur Reynolds, George Dougherty, Robert VanAken, Fred Reynolds.
